Israel Bond Group Sets Goal Of $80 Million This Year

Two reports on economic developments in Israel indicated strong optimism on its continuing progress both by the nation and the free-world community. The accounts of Israeli expansion in the building and electronics industries were presented by Aharon Goldstein and Dr. Leslie K. Gulton, at a luncheon of the American Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry at the Sheraton-Atlantic Hotel, in New York.

Mr. Goldstein, who is president of the Israel Federation of Builders and Contractors, told of plans for vast construction in Israel during the next four years, says the New York Times. Apart from such special projects as the building of five towns in the Negev industrial and mining area, he said, regular building will amount to $1,000,000,000 in the period.

Dr. Gulton, president and chairman of Gulton Industries, Inc., in Metuchen, N. J., electronics concern, reported on his recent trip to Israel in connection with the formation of a subsidiary. The new company, Gulton Industries (Israel), Ltd., will have a plant in Jerusalem that is to begin production of basic industrial electronic products for local use and export about midyear.

In their talks and in later comment both speakers indicated that the extent of the Israeli developments reflected similar large expansion in other fields. In light of the rapid pace of recent economic activity in Israel, further advancement leaves little room for anything but optimism, they declared.

Both speakers said that there was complete confidence in Israel over continued strength and stability of the United States dollar in international exchange values. Dr. Gulton commented that President Kennedy's measures to strengthen the dollar were sound and had inspired general confidence.

Mr. Goldstein noted that the rate of housing construction in Israel was now 35,000 units a year, says the New York Times. He said that although the rate was exceptionally high for a small nation it would tend to rise further. Increased construction, he said, was opening opportunities for participation by American builders and capital. Although Israel produces a considerable volume of its own building materials, he added, his visit to that country has spurred interest in importing some American materials such as aluminum windows.

Dr. Gulton said that the new electronics plant, in which the Swiss Israel Trade Bank is an equal co-owner with the new subsidiary, would spur research by Israeli technicians. While the Israeli company will produce control, measurement and data equipment like that made at the Metuchen plant, Dr. Gulton said, a main product will be energy-converters.

These will be important adjuncts to Israel's development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, he said. Noting that the Israeli concern would put the same heavy emphasis on research as has the American company, says the New York Times, Dr. Gulton said he was confident that it would develop new products that would be made available to the parent company.

Nazi Trials Spur World Jewish Congress Search For Witnesses

Parallel with the trial of Adolf Eichmann in Israel, the West German authorities are preparing trials of Nazi concentration camp officials and annihilation squad members charged with participating in the murder of 6,000,000 Jews. Their number is expected to reach the 100 mark. The West German authorities are in constant touch with the World Jewish Congress in New York in connection with tracing witnesses, obtaining depositions and other relevant information.

As a result of the World Jewish Congress' global appeal, about 300 persons all over the world have been traced or have given testimony. In at least two of the major cases, one involving the camp command at Auschwitz, 34 Nazis have already been arrested and are awaiting trial.

Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director of the World Jewish Congress' Institute of Jewish Affairs in New York, has reported to the W.J.C. Executive the results of a two-year search for criminals and witnesses by the Central Office for War Crimes in Ludwigsburg, under the direction of Dr. Edwin Schuele.

Investigations have been initiated on a broad scale, the two main complexes being the major concentration camps and the Special Annihilation Squads (Einsatzgruppen) and their units, which were active in those areas of the Soviet Union occupied by Hitler. Special attention has also been paid to crimes committed in Nazi-occupied Poland. In addition, investigations are now being conducted into crimes committed in Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Yugoslavia, the Netherlands, Norway, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary, as well as within that part of the former German Reich now outside West Germany.

The biggest investigation is into crimes at Auschwitz and its satellite camps. The case involves 950 Nazis of whom 28 are already under arrest. Investigations are also being conducted into crimes in such notorious concentration camps as Mauthausen, six of whose officials have been detained; Buchenwald, Ravensbrueck, Stutthof, and Sachsenhausen. Eight separate investigations are being conducted into the mass murder of Jews in Poland carried out during Aktion Reinhard, the systematic extermination of Jews in the territory of the Government General of Poland in 1942 and 1943. Crimes in the districts of Cracow, Lwow, Warsaw, and Lublin are being investigated separately.

The cases of the special squads (Einsatzgruppen) cover all areas of the Soviet Union that were occupied by the Germans, including Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, White Russia, the Ukraine, the Caucasus, Transnistria, and Bessarabia. Special investigations are also being carried out into the wave of anti-Jewish excesses on Crystal Night, when so much glass was shattered, in November, 1938, and into the so-called "mercy-killing" program conducted by the Nazis.

Bnai Brith Head Ruled Out Of Order In U.N. For Charge Against Soviet

A charge that anti-Jewish stories in the Soviet press are reinforcing "negative attitudes" toward Jews in the Soviet Union was contained in the portion of the oral statement by Label A. Katz, president of Bnai Brith, which was gavelled out of order by a UN subcommission. Mr. Katz was prepared to cite examples of newspaper articles in the provincial Soviet press that carried scurrilous references to Judaism and Jewish religious practices when his appearance before the UN Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities was interrupted by a directive from the chairman that he refrain from discussing anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

The undelivered portion of Mr. Katz's statement described the inflammatory Soviet newspaper stories as being "of a character that abets prejudice" and that the "persistence" of their appearance is known to Kremlin leaders, but that little is done to counteract such anti-Semitic stereotyping. Mr. Katz had also intended to disclose the results of an examination of pre-college Soviet textbooks which "show an extreme paucity of reference to either Jews or Jewish culture . . . Even the Nazi persecution of Jews is slighted and there is little information available to Soviet youth that would tend to counteract stereotypic thinking and project a positive image of the Jew."

The Bnai Brith leader appeared before the subcommission, which is conducting a study of "manifestations of anti-Semitism," as spokesman for the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations, comprising Bnai Brith, the Board of Deputies of British Jews, and the South African Board of Jewish Deputies. His statement was planned to supplement several documents filed by CBJO which reported in detail on Soviet anti-Semitism. Mr. Katz was ordered to discontinue any recital in this vein after telling the subcommission that while the Soviet Union had not reported any incidents during the wave of swastika desecrations last winter, there had been "overt anti-Semitic acts" three months prior during Rush Hashanah in the eruption of violence at Malakhovka, a small suburb of Moscow.

The chairman's ruling against Mr. Katz's speaking on the subject followed an earlier complaint by Valentyn I. Sapozhnikov, the Soviet delegate, that such references slandered the U.S.S.R. government. Following the interruption, Mr. Katz completed the final portion of his statement, urging that individual governments and UN agencies such as UNESCO begin "working conferences" of leaders in mass media that could explore methods for making "expressions of hatred" obsolete.

Such action, Mr. Katz said, would be in accord with the UN's Draft Convention on Freedom of Information which "emphasizes the responsibilities of government in preventing expressions that incite national, racial, or religious hatred." He also proposed that UNESCO draft outlines of textbook material on the Nazi period for educational institutions because of the lack of knowledge among youth about the Hitler era and its persecution of minority groups.

The swastika desecrations "revealed the existence of a hidden yet strong core of anti-Semitism among youth." Massive educational treatment is needed and history and social textbooks currently in use throughout the world should be examined for their treatment of minority groups. Mr. Katz noted that 1,800 incidents of anti-Semi-

Arabs Plan Use Of Force In Jordan Water Dispute

Arab foreign ministers are advising their governments to use armed force to keep Israel from diverting Jordan River waters, informed sources said in Baghdad, Iraq. The sources said this decision was made secretly at a conference of Arab League foreign ministers. A formal resolution on the Jordan stated only that the ministers had decided "on what course to take."

Israel is building a pipeline to carry water from the Jordan Valley, at or near the Sea of Galilee, to the Negev from an irrigation project. The pipeline is scheduled for completion in 1963, says the New York Times. The Arab states bordering on Israel object that this would deprive them of water. They also fear that irrigation of the Negev would strengthen Israel by providing room for more immigrants.

A decision to use force would mark a significant change in policy. Until now the Arab states have concentrated on plans to counter Israel by diverting the headwaters of the Jordan which rises in Arab territory. Despite the secrecy covering most of the proceedings at the six-day conference, reports of the decision to recommend the use of force in the river dispute were freely "leaked" to United States and British correspondents.

This led to the inference that some of the ministers wished to stir alarm in the West, presumably as the beginning of a campaign to bring international pressure on Israel.

According to the informants, the foreign ministers reasoned that a "third round" of conflict with Israel would be unavoidable if the Israelis persisted. The ministers reasoned, it was said, that Israel probably would attack the Arab countries if they attempted to divert the headwaters.

On November 20 Mrs. Golda Meir, Israeli Foreign Minister, had declared that any such action would be considered "a threat to peace." The ministers therefore reasoned, the informants continued, that it would be more realistic to use force at the point of conflict — wherever the Israelis decided to tap the Jordan for their pipeline.

Merchant Prince Headed Fourth Largest U.S. Chain, Was Famous As New York Citizen

Walter Nathan Rothschild, aged sixty-eight years, chairman of the executive committee of Federated Department Stores, Inc., one of the largest merchandising groups in America, died at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Rothschild was stricken while playing golf. He was there to attend a meeting of executives of the company, which runs such department stores as Abraham & Straus, and Bloomingdale's in New York; Filene's, in Boston, Mass.; as well as others in Miami, Florida; Houston, Dallas, Texas; and Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Besides heading Federated, which ranks fourth in retail sales in the U.S., Mr. Rothschild was extremely active in the civic affairs of his native New York and supported many charities, not only with generous gifts but also by donating his time and energy. He was further noted as one of the finest yachtsmen on the Eastern seaboard and an enthusiastic golfer and skier.

Walter Rothschild was born into a family of merchants and seemed destined for a career at Abraham & Straus but his first love for much of his youth was the sea. His grandfather, Abraham Abraham (Mr. Rothschild once explained the name by saying: "His parents were lazy.") helped found A. & S. on Fulton Street, Brooklyn, with Joseph Wechsler, on St. Valentine's Day, 1865.

His Alabama-born father served as the store's president. Walter attended Sunday dinners given by his grandfather at which only one subject was discussed, A. & S. With such a past the future was mapped out for him. Mr. Rothschild, however, told his family that retailing was his second choice.

After attending Brooklyn's Polytechnic Preparatory School he wanted to go to Annapolis. Bad eyesight forced him to give up this idea and instead he was graduated from Princeton University and then began work at A. & S. opening crates.

During World War I, Mr. Rothschild enlisted in the Navy at Brooklyn Navy Yard. He was made a chief petty officer and sent to Annapolis for a ninety-day course, says the New York Herald Tribune. Because of a fortunate arrangement of plate glass windows, he was able to memorize the sight charts while waiting in line for his eye examination. He passed the test easily but when the Navy found out about it he was put to work as personnel officer of the Third Naval District and served as a Lieutenant j. g.

In 1925, Mr. Rothschild was made manager of A. & S. after having worked in practically every department since 1913. He quickly undertook an expansion program that A. & S. has pursued ever since until it grew into the giant parent company known today as Federated Department Stores, Inc.

Despite the expansion program, Mr. Rothschild found time for his main outside-business activities, the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York City, of which he was a trustee; the Girl Scouts; Sarah Lawrence College, of which he was a trustee and chairman of the development fund committee; the Committee for Economic Development; and the American Jewish Committee, of which he was a member of the executive committee.

As chairman of the Army-Navy Committee of the National Jewish Welfare Board he traveled to England to supervise the committee's work there. For this he received the Medal of Freedom with Bronze Palm. He also served on the executive committee of the United Service Organizations.

He was also president of the Animal Medical Center, which operates the Ellin Prince Speyer Hospital, in New York, at 350 Lafayette Street, a pet adoption service, a mobile pet clinic, and an institute for veterinary research.

Mr. Rothschild, who owned the yawl Avanti, was seen frequently in the winning ranks of races out of many of the yachting towns on Long Island Sound, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Avanti was lost in hurricane Carol and was replaced by him with the Andante, a motor-sailer.

Mr. Rothschild was a member of the Princeton Club, the Century Association, the Nassau Club, the Eastern and New Bedford Yacht Clubs, the Century Country Club, and the Unity Club of Brooklyn.

Mr. Rothschild was interested in both the young and the old. He

Monumentun Aere Perennius (More Lasting Than Brass)

BY BERNARD S. SUPER, IN THE JEWISH FRONTIER, OF NEW YORK

Menachem was beginning to feel his age. Of late it cost him an ever greater effort to prise himself from bed in the morning. The fog of sleepiness would cloud his brain longer, the chill morning air bit deeper into his flesh, and the network of aches and pains spread relentlessly further over his body. Nowadays, he often found himself fumbling over some operation which he had always executed with automatic, unthinking precision.

Now, as he stood outside the kibbutz dining-hall waiting for the tractor and cart that would take him and the other dozen or so chaverim out to their day's work in the fields, he found he could not even concentrate his thoughts properly on the schedule for the day. However, he pulled himself together and gave the requisite instructions to the four men who worked under him in the banana plantation.

The chugging of the tractor became audible, injecting a pulse of life into the bleak yard at the back of the dining-hall. The group of dowdily clad figures stirred, there was a clattering of heavy work-boots on the concrete, and a little animation came into the dull and grumpy early-morning faces. The tractor drew up and they all clambered heavily into the cart. At the last moment, 14-year-old Avi came running up, his bootlaces still untied, and just managed to save himself a long run out to the plantation and a dressing-down from Menachem for being late.

"G'morning! G'morning, Menachem!" he called cheerfully as he sat down on the floor of the cart and began attending to his laces.

"Good morning, Avi," said Menachem absently. A few of the others murmured good-morning, too.

"Why don't you get up in time?" said Yakov reprovingly in his precise, mincing accents.

"But I did get up in time," grinned Avi, "Here I am."

A few mouths twitched in the beginning of a smile. Yakov raised his eyebrows, pursed his lips disapprovingly, and said: "You barely reached the cart in time. What if you had missed it?"

"I'd have gone out on foot," replied Avi, his grin broadening.

"Then you would have been late for work," said Yakov, hot on the trail.

"Yes, that's right," said Avi innocently.

"Then you ought to get up in time so as not to be late for the tractor," said Yakov, a note of triumph creeping into his voice.

Avi thought, "What a nudnik!" and said, barely able to keep from laughing, "But I did get up in time, and I didn't miss the cart, and I wasn't late!"

Yakov clicked his tongue in exasperation. "You're still a young whippersnapper; you've got a lot to learn!" he said hostilely.

Avi smiled broadly at him and said, "Will you teach me!" Then, as it occurred to him how much Yakov resembled Shlomo's mimicry of him, Avi burst out laughing. Most of the chaverim had secretly been on his side, but now, feeling that the boy had encroached too far on the privileges of age, instantly changed sides.

"That's enough, Avi," said Menachem quietly, rousing himself from his thoughts. Avi abruptly stopped laughing.

Menachem sank back into his ruminations. ". . . that's how it is," he was thinking, "you work along like a horse day after day, year in and year out, always thinking about next year, always a little behind and always straining to catch up. You think that if only we get good rains next winter, or good prices next spring, or if the plantation would like an extra couple of years before you have to plough it under, or some such thing, then you'll be in the clear. The branch will make a pile and you'll be able to buy all the equipment you've been fighting for all along; you'll have breathing space to reorganize, put in those improvements . . . so you get up on rainy days, too, and when you're sick, and you work extra hours, and shabbatot . . . and you never take all that leave that is piling up, and you say to hell with the idlers and the parasites, and keep on going in spite of everything, and what does it lead to? . . . One day you get up — it's an ordinary day . . . same clothes, same smelly socks, same beastly tea, same faces, same fields, same work to do; situation a little better than last year, perhaps, but you're still behind . . . and you suddenly realize that you're old. An old man. At the other end of life. All past and no future. What you've done, you've done. That's all there is. There is going to be no more catching up, no more making up for lost time, no correcting past mistakes. You've spent your capital of health, strength and will power . . . You just can't take it any more . . . just can't take it."

The tractor stopped. Menachem and Avi got off. The others would be dropped off further on, in other parts of the farm. They were at the edge of the banana plantation, near a rough, corrugated iron shed in which their tools were kept. Menachem unlocked the door and they got ready for work. Avi shouldered the pressure cylinder filled with crude oil, to which was attached a long brass ejector which released a jet of oil when the spring handle was pressed. In his left hand he carried a sticker, a long rod with a hollow, sharpened tip. Menachem wielded a two-foot-long knife and carried the water-can. They walked to the row where they had stopped yesterday and resumed thinning the plants.

Avi sneaked a glance at Menachem as he moved from cluster to cluster, methodically chopping off the superfluous shoots — next year's generation of banana plants which grew out of the roots of the mother plant. Avi's job was to stab the truncated shoot to the heart with his sticker and then insert the tip of his ejecter into the wound and administer a lethal shot of oil to make sure the shoot died. He noticed that the old set-

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

SIMON-GREEN

The marriage of Miss Leona Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Green, 4950 Cumberland Avenue, to Irving Simon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Simon, 3295 Barclay Avenue, was solemnized at Beth Zion Synagogue, on February 19, at half-past six o'clock. Rabbi Sydney Shoham officiated, assisted by Cantor Tibor Holczer. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white peau de sole and lace, embroidered and appliqued with seed-pearl-beads, its fitted bodice designed with a round neckline; and long sleeves; and full skirt shaping into a chapel train. Her veil of tulle illusion was fastened to a crown of seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a white prayer book with white orchids and white satin streamers. Miss Susan Green was made of honour for her sister. She wore a blue peau de soie gown, made with a beaded bodice which had a square neckline; and short sleeves; with a full skirt. Her headdress matched it; and she carried a cascade of pink carnations. Louis Simon was best man for his brother. The ushers were: Ronald Green, brother of the bride; David Simon and Robert Weisbloom, nephews of the groom; Matthew Shragie, Roman Mangel, Frank Share, Isidore Nadler, Marvin Chankowsky, Bernard Harris, Norman Greenberg, Jack Lackman, and Edward Goldstein. Standards of pink and blue carnations, gladioli, and chrysanthemums, with foliage, were the wedding flowers. Mrs. Green, mother of the bride, was in a blue brocaded and embossed gown, made with an oval neckline; short sleeves; and bell-shaped skirt; and her hat was blue. Mrs. Simon, the groom's mother, was in a pale blue, lace sheath, over blue organza; and her hat was of that material. Each had a corsage of blue-tinted orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Irving Simon spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y. They have taken up residence at 4885 St. Catherine Road. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. A. Offner, and Bonnie and Carl, of Darien, Conn.; Misses Anna and Hilda Green, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Braverman, of New York; and Nathan Falcovitch, of Cleveland, Ohio.

MONUMENTUM AERE PERENNIUS (MORE LASTING THAN BRASS)

tler looked more bent than usual; the crinkly bags under his eyes were purplish and the ruddy glow that usually shone through his weather-beaten cheeks seemed to have faded.

As they worked on, the sun rose higher and penetrated through the luxuriant foliage of the banana plants. The heat was oppressive, and Avi found the smell of the oil very trying. At last it was ten o'clock. They completed the row they were working on and walked back to the water-can. Avi sighed with relief. At least twenty minutes rest lay ahead. He went to fill his oil cylinder from the barrel at the corner of the plantation, and when he started back he saw that Menachem had taken the water-can and was moving away from the plantation towards a little hillock crowned by a gnarled old carob tree. Avi followed, surprised and thinking it a waste of precious rest-time.

Menachem sat down, propping himself up against the trunk of the carob; Avi came up and sat down on a boulder close by. The hillock was just high enough to give them a clear view of the settlement above the weird, green sea of sluggishly waving banana fronds. Menachem's eyes passed slowly back and forth across the panorama, taking in every detail —every building, every field, every pathway, every bump and twist of the surrounding terrain. He felt sick and numb with weariness. His ears were ringing, and every now and then the whole scene, quivering in the heat, would appear to shake as though it were a tapestry undulating in the draught.

Presently he began to speak, more to himself than to Avi, ramblingly and disconnectedly, phrase by phrase, lapsing every now and then into a long ruminating silence.

"Thirty-six years. Thirty-six years. How fast they have gone by. Thirty-six years ago all this was a wilderness; just stones and thorns and scrub. See that hill over there? That's more or less what it looked like. Look at the difference. That one's dead and this one's alive . . . pulsating with life, you might say. It's got a big economy . . . with a huge debt. It's full of people — mostly quarreling with one another nowadays, it seems. Boys and girls have been born into it and never known anything else. You too, Avi. For you its existence is self-evident. Can you conceive that it once wasn't there? Just wasn't there. Instead of that kibbutz you're looking at — and which is practically the only part of the world you know — instead of all those fields that yield nearly half-a-million pounds worth of produce per year, there was just nothing, naught, nil. Thirty-six years . . ." His voice trailed away. Avi fiddled with his bootlace.

"Can it really be such a long time since . . . since. . . . I was a young, enthusiastic, muscular, hot-blooded young chalutz (pioneer)? The first first day. It seems so close," said Menachem dreamily, "as if . . . as if I could reach out in time and touch it. . . ."

Towards the end of the summer of 1924, they set out from Mishmar Haemek, before dawn, in four horse-drawn carts, and arrived about an hour before sunrise at the site of their future camp. They stopped their hilarious singing and piled out of the carts all talking volubly and giving each other orders. Yoshka Kossof and Vinya Chachik, who were in charge, shouted and gesticulated until they obtained something like silence, and organized the work. Eight of the boys were detailed to spend the first watch on guard against possible interference from the presumably hostile surrounding Arab villages. Menachem, 22 years old, was in this group. He checked the heavy rifle and more than half-wished there would be a fight so that he could show his mettle. The girls were detailed to set up the kitchen tent, deal with the provisions and prepare the meals. The rest were split up into two groups: one to clear the ground, pitch the tents and then put up the barbed-wire fence, the other to dig fortifications. Yoshka and Vinya ran from place to place supervising the work. The youngsters set to with a will. Every two hours the eight-man guard was changed, so that during the day every man got four hours comparative rest. The remainder of the time they worked like slaves . . . No. No slave ever worked like that. They worked with a frenzied zeal, a fanatic idealism, a blissful ignorance of reason, characteristic of, and peculiar to Second Aliyah chalutzim — a species that sprang up for a brief interlude in history, bore fruit, and then gradually metamorphosed into something else. "The reasonable man endeavors to adapt himself to the conditions," said Bernard Shaw, "the unreasonable man persists in trying to adapt the conditions to himself. Therefore all progress is due to the unreasonable man."

At about seven-thirty, Menachem's group guard-duty was over, and after swallowing some food they set to work. He and Liuva started digging a trench — he at one end and Liuva at the other. They made it a race to see who got past the half-way mark first. How the earth flew. How viciously he hacked at a boulder that held him up. Desperately he tore away the earth around it, loosened it and then heaved it up and out of the trench with a strength that was not his own. Later in the day, two men had barely been able to roll it away to where it was needed. Thud! Thud! Thud! with the pickaxe. Then a few muscular scrapes with the mattock, then the spade again to fling the earth out of the trench. He attacked the solid, stolid earth like a madman. Mentally he cursed it with the wildest most outrageous Russian curses he knew — he had no breath to curse it out loud.

By all judges the race was declared a tie, but Menachem knew that had it not been for the boulder, he would have beaten the giant Liuva.

At noon, the girls called out that lunch was ready; but, of course, no one budged from his job. No one wanted to hear it said of him, even in fun, "Aah, for food he runs!" and apart from that, there was just a bit more to finish — up to that root . . . another few centimeters . . . one more post . . . one more tent. The girls had to drag them to the kitchen-tent, one by one, after arguing, cajoling, pleading and scolding — by sheer perseverance, in fact.

Menachem gulped down his food standing. He could hardly hold the plate in his torn hands . . . He was now working on the fence — again competing with Liuva. He would always be competing with Liuva: in the early years, in work; later on, in politics. After the pilug ("split"), a wry jest would be made by the older members: "In Tel-Tamar, the split wasn't between 'Mem' and 'Aleph'. In Knesset elections, aleph ("a") stands for Mapai and mem ("m") stands for Mapam) but between 'Mem' and 'Lamed' (Menachem and Liuva)."

Crunch! Crunch! Crunch! Three or four hefty blows with the pickaxe; then he took the fence pole with both hands, raised it above his head and brought it down with all his might on the ground. It bit into the loosened earth and stood. Then he snatched up the sledgehammer and raising

TORONTO ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Stickles, of Copper Cliff, Ont., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lynne Mary Susan Stickles, to Isadore Freedman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Freedman, 240 Major Street. The marriage will take place on April 16, at half-past five o'clock, in Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, in Sudbury, Ont.

The engagement of Miss Gloria Hoffman, daughter of Mrs. Anne Hoffman, 123 Dynevor Road, and the late Meyer Hoffman, to Sheldon Luftspring, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Luftspring, 763 Lawrence Avenue West. The marriage will take place on October 15, in Adath Israel Synagogue.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

TYBERG-BYER

The marriage of Miss Shulamith Harriet Byer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chone Byer, 62 St. Cyrille Avenue, to Zvi Tyberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Tyberg, 881 Edward Charles Avenue, took place at Adath Israel Synagogue, on February 21, at seven o'clock. Rabbi Charles Bender officiated, assisted by Rabbi P. Hirshprung, Cantor Eugene Goldberger, and Reverend M. Mandelcorn. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She was gowned in white lace, re-embroidered with seed-pearl-beads and iridescent beads, and cut with a tight-fitted bodice, made with a square neckline, and a small, stand-up collar; long sleeves coming to points at the wrists; and full skirt ending in a short train. Her finger-tip veil of tulle illusion was held by a seed-pearl-beaded crown; and she carried a white prayer book with white orchids. Mrs. Alex S. Rudner was matron of honour for her sister. She was in a gown of ice-blue peau de soie, made with a scooped neckline; and three-quarter-length sleeves; and a sheath skirt with an overskirt of the same material. Her hat was of velour and organza petals in shaded blue; and she carried a semi-cascade of white and pink carnations and roses. Samuel Tyberg was best man for his brother. The ushers were: Gerson Byer, brother of the bride; Alex S. Rudner, brother-in-law of the bride; Tovia Tyberg, brother of the groom; Avrum Rudner, Joseph Rudner, and Moishe Kulik. Moishe Byer, nephew of the bride, was page boy. Standards of pink and white carnations and gladioli with greenery were the wedding flowers. Mrs. Byer, mother of the bride, wore a deep mauve gown, made with a V-neckline; three-quarter-length sleeves; and skirt with long panels draped to the side; also a pale mauve organza hat. Mrs. Tyberg, mother of the groom, wore a coral-coloured, brocaded satin gown, designed with a high neckline; long sleeves; and a bell-shaped skirt; also a straw and tulle hat of coral-colour. Their corsages were of white orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Zvi Tyberg spent their wedding trip at Ferndale, N. Y., the bride travelling in a brown, knitted suit. They have taken up residence at 2840 Darlington Place. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Knopf, Miss Elaine Knopf, of New York; Miss Zipporah Wachtfogel, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. Dora Engel, of Ottawa, Ont.; Mrs. Edward Deitch, of Toronto, Ont.; and Tovia Tyberg, of Cleveland, Ohio.

it high above his head, and rising on tiptoes, he would crash it down on the post. He never missed. The post would sink a foot at the first blow. Liuva had the advantage of him in height but Menachem was quicker, and he had a knack of jerking his shoulders so as to get an extra "wallop" into the hammer blow. He was quicker at sinking the poles, but Liuva beat him at stretching the wire — his weight was an unconquerable advantage. He would lean his massive frame on the wire and whip it round the post and it needed no more tightening.

The broiling sun beat down upon the toiling backs. Tools grew heavier and heavier, the earth harder and harder. Towards sunset, Menachem hardly knew what he was doing. His head swam and his arms and neck, back and thighs and everything ached, screaming hysterically at him to let them rest. As the sun glided into a notch in the rugged skyline in the west, Yoshka and Vinya called a halt, changed the guard, and sent the eight rested men to put the finishing touches to the fortifications. The camp was finished.

The girls had prepared a bonfire in the middle of the camp area, which they now lit. The workers came stumbling over to throw themselves down by the fire. The evening meal was unimaginably good. Certainly the best they had ever tasted, and certainly the best they would taste in a long, long time, for it consisted of such luxuries as big portions of meat, three-egg omelettes, potatoes swimming in butter, and lots of fruit. To top it all, each person received three mugs of coffee.

At first they merely masticated dumbly, and only female voices could be heard. But the rest and the coffee brought them to themselves. Someone struck up a tune and they began pouring out their hearts in song — triumphant songs, sad songs, martial songs, sentimental songs, pioneering songs; some of them in Russian and Yiddish, most of them in Hebrew. Every now and then someone would be called upon to sing a solo — his or her specialty — and this evening no one played shy until coaxed into coy consent. When Menachem's turn came round, he sang an Arabic song he had learnt in Nazareth. It had a lilting, noisy chorus in which everybody joined.

Never had he been so happy — and never would he be again. Every aching muscle was an exquisite pleasure. His whole being was suffused by a blissful, luxurious lassitude. He had given every ounce of strength he had in him, wrung from his body the last drop of energy, conquered it completely with his will.

The red-gold flames of the fire strove upwards, writhing and capering in fantastic contortions, lighting and enlivening the ring of smooth faces and putting sparks into their eyes. Someone cast a log upon the bonfire and a scintillating shower of racing points of light was released to exist fleetingly in the air. And Rachel was sitting close beside him, touching him. Daringly he put his arm around her while they were singing a sentimental song. She leaned against him. A rapturous thrill ran through his body, and he felt his numbness thawing. Peeping over her head he could just make out his knobby hand resting on the smooth skin of her arm. He raised it for a moment. It left a smudge of blood on her skin. Rachel glanced at it, and then at him, and smiled. He dropped his arm, and she straightened up, but did not touch the smudge. Instead, she took his hand and held it in both of hers, palm upwards, and gazed at it. How proud he was of his hand at that moment — every cut, every crack, every blister. It looked good. A peasant who had toiled in the fields since early childhood could not have produced a better.

As the song they were singing came to an end with a wobbly attempt at harmony, Menachem scrambled to his feet. "Hora!" he roared and began singing, "David, melech Yisrael, hai, hai vekayam . . ." Everybody got up and joined in, nobody dared admit it was beyond him. They kept going, dancing round the bonfire for an hour, then the girls dropped out and the boys made it an excuse to stop also. Vinya called for silence and announced, "And now I would like to say a few words. . . ." He didn't get any further; he was hilariously shouted down, his voice drowned in lusty song. However, a few minutes later, Yoshka quietened them down and asked them to let Vinya have his say. There were a few catcalls at first, but the youngsters soon quietened down and listened quietly.

In the high flown euphemisms current in that period but with complete sincerity — and unusual brevity — Vinya spoke to them of what they had done: staked a claim for the Jewish people in another region of its ancient lost homeland . . . drawn one step nearer to the Jewish state . . . realized the loftiest pioneering ideal . . . renewed and resurrected . . . upbuilt . . . proved this and proved that, and so forth and so on. The brilliant conclusion of his sermon was drowned in a fanfare of snores. The sleepers were half-wakened and dragged to their tents. Yoshka and Vinya took turns to watch over the guards, see that the change-overs were made on time and that they did not fall asleep.

Menachem stretched out on his blankets and fell asleep so quickly he barely had time to complete the exultant thought: "I've kissed Rachel!"

"Everything was new in those days," said Menachem staring into the distance, a spark of the old fanatic zeal coming to his eyes and lending a strange intensity to his craggy features. "Everything was great, a truly great adventure. Everything was important and meaningful. Can you grasp what it was? We were doing something that had never been done before; something unique. We were snatching an opportunity that might appear only once in the whole of history to . . . to resurrect a scattered, shattered nation. We were creating real solid achievements out of an ethereal belief. . . .

"That's what we're here for — to create, to make things, to act, to build, to convert a bare hill into a settlement. . . .

"Yes, it all seems so ordinary today, so humdrum, so routine, and too often so discouraging, even demoralizing. I suppose we really oughtn't to blame you kids if it appears different to you, if you see the petty strife, the friction and the dirt in the yard, more than you see the ideal, the achievement and the whole edifice. If we can forget so completely what we once felt and believed with such fervor, then what demands can we make upon you — who never knew. . . .

"I wonder if your job, just to carry on and bear the brunt of the work, to keep the machine going with all its faults and bad parts, isn't harder than what we did. Perhaps, after all, your generation is to be pitied. Born too late. Just twenty or thirty years too late.

"The life that's nearly drained out of us is in these fields and in that settlement nestling out there among the hills. It might seem rather a small, modest return for such an enormous amount of effort and sacrifice, but . . . somehow . . . I don't think so. I believe it was worth it . . . that our lives were indeed well spent."

Menachem fell silent. While talking he had appeared to revive somewhat. Now he looked worse than before. Avi glanced at his watch: it was nearly ten-thirty-five. They had been resting for over half-an-hour! At last Menachem roused himself, and rose shakily to his feet.

"Avi, you're a good lad. Carry on with the thinning will you? You know how it's done, don't you? I'm not feeling well and I'm going back in."

"Sure, I'll get along" said Avi. He took the knife from Menachem's hand and started towards the banana plantation. As he reached the edge of the plot he turned to look back, and stood for a few minutes watching Menachem's bowed old figure recede, the outlines becoming more and more blurred by the shimmering heat waves, seeming to merge gradually into a rich brown soil.

For a few moments Avi's mind struggled with some deep philosophic thought, but somehow it didn't manage to crystallize. He decided he would leave the oil apparatus and sticker at the end of the row, move down and back with the chopper first, and then leave the chopper and do the piling. Slash! Slash! The knife descended and the first two condemned shoots toppled over. Avi looked at the clean cuts with pride.

"I won't pack up at noon; I'll work a full day today to make up for Menachem's going home," he thought happily.

Propose U.S. Stamp To Honor Robert Morris Who Aided Revolution

A proposal for a series of special postage stamps in honor of Robert Morris, the only Jewish signer of the Declaration of Independence, and his 55 colleagues who proclaimed that document in 1776, has been submitted to U.S. Postmaster General Robert E. Day and James F. Kelleher, Special Assistant to the Postmaster General in charge of commemorative issues, by Rabbi Chaim U. Lipschitz, president of the National Information Bureau For Jewish Life, 280 Broadway, New York. Rabbi Lipschitz pointed out that the Post Office Department had printed only three postage stamps honoring Jews since 1847. The first was the Joseph Pulitzer 3 cents commemorative, issued on the 100th birthday of the great editor and publisher, although, Pulitzer, born of a Jewish father and a Catholic mother in Hungary, never considered himself a Jew."

Rabbi Lipschitz proposed that the philatelic series of 56 stamps called "The Signers For Freedom Stamps" be issued beginning in 1963 and at intermittent intervals on historical dates during the following 13 years until 1976 when the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence will be obbserved. "In 1948," Rabbi Lipschitz said, "The Four Chaplains 3 cents commemorative stamp honored U.S. Chaplains George I. Fox, Clark V. Poling, John P. Washington, and Rabbi Alexander D. Goode, who sacrificed their lives on February 3, 1943, by giving their life jackets to soldiers on the torpedoed U.S. transport Dorchester, and went down with the ship."

The last of the three stamps, issued in 1950, is the three cents Samuel Gompers commemorative, honoring the great labor leader on the centennial of his birth. Assistant Postmaster General Kelleher has made known that "a New Citizen's Stamp Advisory Committee will soon be appointed and the request for the "Signers For Freedom Stamp" series will be among the first submitted to the members for their consideration."

Robert Morris was born in Liverpool, England, on January 20, 1734, and migrated to the U.S. where he was a prosperous merchant. He signed the Declaration of Independence as a representative of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania on August 2, 1776. He served as Superintendent of Finance during the Revolutionary War. Morris died on May 8, 1806.

The National Information Bureau For Jewish Life is an association which seeks to develop a fuller understanding of the achievements and contributions made by members of the Jewish faith in the fields of American government, business, the performing arts, and sciences. It endeavors to depict more dramatically the patriotic roles of Jews in reciting the history of America through a more significant identification of events with personalities and places.

STAR TIME (1)

This week we thought we'd tell you about some of the stars in the Snider organization — some of the people who are available to entertain you at that important function that you're planning.

Among them there's Tommy Ambrose, host of that happy CBC-TV series "While We're Young" last summer, and currently star of "Club 6" on the same station.

He's played the "Jack Kane Show" and "World of Music" — and the critics say he's the best young singer in the country; and for once we agree with them.

He can help make your next party unforgettable.

It should spring from the desire to help, tempered with the understanding that these people from the old lands have so much to contribute to this, the new. Brotherhood must be more than mere tolerance, or the simple acceptance of one race by another. It should represent the willingness, even the ardent desire, to work toward greater understanding and appreciation. Brotherhood is a thing you have to work at."

The Other Side Of Paris

BY IRVING R. BICKMAN, PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTOR, JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE

Paris seems very gay and prosperous these days. But, in a narrow street, a few doors away from the famous "Folies Bergeres", stands the "Foyer Amical" (Friendly Home), a kosher canteen subsidized by the Joint Distribution Committee, which for 23 years has fed Jewish refugees. Even during the agonizing years of the Nazi occupation, its doors were never closed.

In the past five years 50,000 refugees have found haven in France, fleeing from Egypt, Algeria, and other North African countries, and from behind the Iron Curtain. And still they come. Many are only in transit; others will settle in Paris, Lyons, Marseilles. But they arrive penniless, without possessions, and it takes time for them to get back on their feet. And that's where JDC comes in, with funds provided chiefly by the United Jewish Appeal.

While they are living in the half-world of the refugee, suspended between the past and the future, they find food, warmth, and the comfort of a friendly Jewish atmosphere at the Foyer Amical.

The number of refugees eating at the canteen varies widely from day to day. Sometimes there are 800; sometimes nearly 1,200. The hearty lunch provided, the menu might include vegetable soup, meatballs and macaroni with tomato sauce, and plenty of crusty French bread, is their one substantial meal of the day. In addition, the canteen feeds 150 children a day who cannot come to the dining-hall for one reason or another. Their parents bring cooking-pots with them and take the meal home to the hungry youngsters.

The cook is himself an Egyptian refugee. He is assisted by 13 paid, full-time workers, plus a corps of woman volunteers recruited by the committee of local French Jews who run the canteen. About 25 percent of the refugees are fed free. Others, who receive cash relief from one or another of the JDC-subsidized welfare agencies, which includes an allowance for meals, pay a small fee.

All the Jewish holidays are celebrated in the traditional manner in the canteen. At Pesach time, because of limitations of space and facilities, two seders are held so that all the refugees can participate in at least one. Last Pesach 650 refugees attended them. At Chanukah this December a party was given for 150 refugee children at which each child received a bag of candy, a toy, and a Hebrew lesson book. The gifts were donated by the canteen committee and other generous friends of the canteen.

At the Foyer you might meet an attractive dark-haired girl of 22 who left Tunis three months ago to join her brother in Paris. She is looking for a job as a shorthand-typist and it worries her that she has not yet found employment. Her mother, father, and six brothers and sisters are still in Tunis, and she and her brother are working for the day when the whole family can be re-united in Israel.

You might meet a man of 50 who finally got out of Rumania six months ago with his wife and children. He is a bookkeeper by profession and the family hopes to go to Canada where Mr. G. has a brother who is a professor of engineering in a university. Talk to him and you will find him full of hope and determined to succeed in building a new life for his family.

You might meet Mr. K. from Poland. He is only 46 but his black hair is thickly streaked with gray and he looks older. Four months ago, after years of trying, he was able to leave Poland, where he was a photographer with his own business. He had to leave his wife and children behind, he may very likely show you their pictures. His main concern now is to bring them from Poland. So far he has not been able to find work and he realizes it will not be easy to get started again. Nonetheless, he is full of courage and determination.

These are only three out of hundreds, even thousands, each with his own story of uprooting and flight. Paris may be gay again, full of music and light and laughter. But the homeless and hungry are still here, and they still need a helping hand.

Conference Seeks Antidote To Conformity Of Life In Suburbia

Suburban comfort and complacency threaten to sap the vitality of Jewish life in America, it was asserted at a conference on Jewish values sponsored by the American Jewish Congress. Speakers at an all-day meeting of 150 Jewish educators, rabbis, and communal leaders, in New York, called for stronger cultural and spiritual links between American Jews and Israel as an antidote to the "conformity and lack of purpose of life in suburbia." They urged expanded programs of Jewish education to foster a spirit of idealism among the young Jewish generation, including service as pioneers in Israel, that would result in a more meaningful Jewish life and a more vibrant Jewish community.

Professor Sol Liptzin, of City College, chairman of the A.J.C. Congress Commission on Jewish Affairs, presided at the meeting in Stephen Wise Congress House, at 15 East 84th Street. Subject of the conference was "East European Roots Of Jewish Life, From 'Shtetl' to Suburbia."

Dr. Judah Pilch, director of the National Curriculum Research Institute of the American Association for Jewish Education, told the meeting that the "restless spirit" which characterized Jewish life in the "shtetl" (small Jewish town) of Eastern Europe before World War I was "out of tune" with the materialistic environment of suburbia. "In an atmosphere of 'all is well', there can be little Jewish creativity," he said. "Conformity, even insofar as religious experiences are concerned, does not motivate the pursuit of God or an honest search to discover what it is that God wants of man and man wants of God.

"Only through the restoration of the spirit of dissatisfaction with life as it is can we re-introduce those values of the 'shtetl' which have relevance for today and which may re-Judaize the de-Judaized Jew of 1961," he asserted.

Rabbi Gershon Winer, of the Baldwin (L. I.) Jewish Center, said "shtetl" values such as a regard for learning and commitment to an ideal could not be transmitted by the suburban synagogue. "As a social center rather than a spiritual force," Dr. Winer said, "the synagogue is a tool for indiscriminate group survival rather than the agent for spiritual and cultural revival.

"If the intellectual emphasis and idealistic striving which characterized Jewish life in the 'shtetl' are to take root in the soil of the American suburb," Dr. Winer said, "the job cannot be done by the synagogue. It is, rather, the responsibility of Jewish communal bodies to strengthen efforts aimed at perpetuating the eternals of 'shtetl' civilization and to aim at higher goals for Jewish youth and adult education."

Dr. Hyman B. Bass, executive secretary of the Congress, for Jewish culture, struck an optimistic note at the American Jewish Congress meeting. "The younger Jewish generation of today seeks to return to the ways of their grandparents, ways which their own parents rebelled against," he noted. This indicates that assimilation as a phenomenon in American Jewish life was mostly the result of the initial shock induced by the meeting of the old 'shtetl' culture and the urban society of twentieth century America.

"The fact that the centrifugal social forces are diminishing and that new social forces leading back to the group are gaining strength poses today's challenge to American Jewish leadership: how to seize the opportunity afforded by this resurgence of Jewish interest to create the proper forms of communal organization that will help preserve the Jewish group and strengthen the sense of identification of the Jewish individual."

Dr. Abraham Duker, president of the College of Jewish Studies, of Chicago, Ill., also presented a paper. Mrs. Kalia Bokser, a member of the board of directors of the National Women's League, United Synagogue of America, served as panel discussant. In addition, contributions to the discussion were prepared by: Samuel Dinin, dean of the University of Judaism, in Los Angeles; Dr. A. Gollomb, director of the Jewish College of Mexico, in Mexico City; Melech Ravitch, of Montreal, Canada, noted Yiddish poet; Maurice Samuel, author; Louis Segal, general secretary of the Farband Labor Zionist Order; Dr. Max Weinreich, Professor of Yiddish, at the City College, in New York; Dr. Trude Weiss-Rosmarin, editor of "The Jewish Spectator"; and Aaron Zeitlin, Yiddish and Hebrew dramatist.

QUEBEC — ONTARIO THE MARITIMES

Intermarriage Is Here To Stay

"There is a curious discrepancy between the public concern and agitation of many American Jews that the growing number of intermarriages constitutes a threat to the survival of the Jewish group in this country and the reassuring findings of social scientists that the number of intermarriages has always been small and that whatever threat exists to Jewish group survival does not come from that direction," Professor Joseph Maier, of the Department of Sociology of Rutgers University, in New Brunswick, N.J., told the Conference on Intermarriage and Jewish Life which was convened by the Theodor Herzl Institute, in New York. He pointed out that this discrepancy must be explained by the paucity of reliable data and of serious research on the subject of intermarriage.

However, despite the lack of comprehensive statistical information, a number of noteworthy conclusions emerged from the Conference.

The rate of intermarriage is lower among Jews than among any other white minority group in the United States. Between eighty and ninety percent of all Jews in the United States marry within their faith. The relatively strong cohesiveness of the Jewish family is an important deterrent to intermarriage. Marriage is a major factor in conversion to Judaism. Of the more than 2,000 non-Jews who are being converted to Judaism each year in the United States, nineteen out of twenty convert in order to marry Jewish spouses.

Although it is not clear whether or not intermarriage among American Jews as a whole is on the increase, speakers agreed that in the small community intermarriage seems to be decreasing. While the anonymity of the large cities encourages intermarriage, social pressure in the smaller communities is such that despite the limited number of available Jewish mates and the generally extensive inter-dating, intermarriage is effectively discouraged.

More Jewish men than women marry non-Jews. A survey conducted in Washington, D.C., in 1950, for example, revealed that of all Jewish husbands interviewed 7.8 per cent had non-Jewish wives while only 3.5 per cent of the Jewish wives had non-Jewish husbands.

The high reputation which Jewish husbands and the Jewish home have earned in the American community may account for the fact that Jewish women seem to be more reluctant to marry non-Jewish men; and non-Jewish women more willing to marry Jewish husbands.

The majority of women converting to Judaism become active in Jewish life. They join synagogues, rear their children as Jews, and participate in Jewish communal affairs. They are an asset rather than a liability to the Jewish community.

The campus life of Colleges and Universities encourages intermarriage. This seems due not only to the high percentage of Jews attending institutions of higher learning and professional schools, but also to the fact that many of these young people tend to repudiate their own middle class background and are likely to regard intermarriage as an expression of tolerance or as a casting off of irrational prejudices.

Intermarriage is here to stay and the Jewish community must make provisions to absorb converts. Many speakers at the Conference emphasized that these mixed couples should be fully accepted into the Jewish community and their children being given the right to grow up as Jews, regardless of whether they are children of Jewish mothers or of Jewish fathers.

All speakers agreed that American democracy, heir to European liberalism, has greatly increased opportunities for contact between Jews and non-Jews, and that the associational character of the American society with its geographic and social mobility enhances the trend towards intermarriage. They pointed to a strengthening of Jewish education and of the roots of the Jewish family as the most important deterrent to intermarriage.

A full text of the papers delivered at the Conference will be available shortly from the Theodor Herzl Institute, 515 Park Avenue, New York.

tism were reported in 39 countries during the period December 1959-May 1960, but only in the United States "was a serious effort made" by social scientists to probe the roots of the epidemic.

A study by two Columbia University psychologists, David Caplowitz and Candace Rogers, showed that only six per cent of those apprehended by authorities in the U. S. for swastika desecrations were over 23 years of age. There were two categories of young persons involved in the incidents, those who expressed specific hostility to Jews; and those who had a "random hostility" and were eager to take up any popular anti-social activity. If this random hostility can be readily transferred to Jews when they are suggested as targets, there is cause for considerable concern," Mr. Katz declared.

ARABS PLAN USE OF FORCE

The direct burden of any fighting would fall on the Syrian region of the United Arab Republic. North of the Sea of Galilee the Israeli frontier faces a long, high ridge on the Syrian side. The river banks and seashore are well within range of artillery on the ridge.

It was not made clear whether the Arab states also would go ahead with their plan to divert the three rivers that flow together to form the Jordan, the Hasbani, in Lebanon, and the Dan and the Banyas in Syria.

The outcome of the minister's advice depends, of course, on the opinions of their governments and the views of military commanders, says the New York Times. The informants said Iraq took the lead in proposing the use of force and was seconded by the United Arab Republic. Jordan and Lebanon, which also have common frontiers with Israel, agreed. So did Saudi Arabia, which takes an active interest in the Israel question.

NAZI TRIALS

The World Jewish Congress experts in New York maintain constant contact with the Central Office for War Crimes and with prosecutors working on individual cases.

The W.J.C. search for witnesses has brought responses from former camp inmates now living in the United States, Canada, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Uruguay, Australia, South Africa, Belgium, France, Britain, Israel and many other lands. Some witnesses have provided testimony against Nazis already under investigation or detained, while the testimony of others has resulted in searches for certain Nazi officials whose identity was previously unknown to the German authorities.

Anyone able to offer testimony as to crimes committed by the Nazis in the camps or areas mentioned should get in touch with the World Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York 28, N. Y.

was one of the first merchants to set up a store-wide pension plan and established a scholarship program for children of A. & S. employees. Mr. Rothschild, who gave his yawl, Avanti, to the Coast Guard during World War II, handed down to younger generations his love of the sea by starting a sailing class for youngsters at the New Bedford Yacht Club in South Dartmouth, Mass.

In the retail field, Mr. Rothschild was known throughout the country with affection. In 1956, he was given the Tobe award for "distinguished contribution to American Retailing." He served on numerous retail groups, was chairman of the Merchants Advisory Council of the School of Retailing in New York University, and was awarded many honors for his contributions to New York City.

In 1916, he married Miss Carola Warburg. He lived at 1 East Eighty-seventh Street, and he and his family also had a home in White Plains, called Woodlands, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Surviving are his wife, who is the daughter of the late Felix M. Warburg, famous banker, art patron, and philanthropist; two daughters, Mrs. Amory H. Bradford, wife of the vice-president of "The New York Times"; and Mrs. C. Brooks Peters; a son, Walter N. Rothschild jr.; and thirteen grandchildren.

About ten years before retirement from business is a good time to start planning for the long time of leisure, which could become boring unless there is a constructive program. If finances will be short, any marketable talent should be improved through study and instruction. There are many jobs which the retired expert can obtain for part-time work.
